

As-Planted Rose Plan

The Kathrine Dulin Folger Rose Garden showcases roses and other plantings that support healthy relationships between people, plants, and insects. The Folger Rose Garden is a treasured component of the Smithsonian Gardens on the National Mall in Washington, D.C., providing a space that is beautiful, educational, and inspiring. The goal of the Kathrine Dulin Folger Rose Garden exhibit is to engage visitors in the garden, deepen their understanding of roses, and introduce them to big picture concepts that illuminate healthy and sustainable landscapes.

The roses are depicted in this plan:

- in the color of their blooms
- at their anticipated mature size (their size at three years following installation):
